

Jennifer Green started her time as a senior lecturer at CWU in Jan 2008. During her time at CWU, Green continues to be the student and learn from her experiences as well as the experiences of others around her.

Green's work at Central Washington University, The Ellensburg Daily Record, and Screen International all arose after her work as an undergraduate and graduate at San Francisco State University and University of California, Santa Barbara. Green's passion to teach has relied on her experiences working in the field of journalism.

During her time at CWU, Green has fulfilled the philosophy of the university by implementing hands-on learning to her students. Green has showed this learning strategy by being a faculty advisor for the CWU campus magazine, PULSE.

Green continues to work in the field of journalism as a columnist for The Ellensburg Daily Record with her column "Films from Afar" where she acts as a film critic. Being fluent in three languages (English, Spanish, and French) inspired Green to work abroad as a former Spain and Portugal Correspondent and a current freelance writer for Screen International.

Green came to CWU after working with various news outlets such as ABC News and The Washington Post. She also taught a mass media course to the study-abroad students at Syracuse University.

While Green teaches students at CWU, she continues to work as a student at the Universidad Autonoma de Madrid to obtain her PhD. Her hobbies include tennis, her two children, and writing her dissertation for her PhD.
